Pootling along at 65mph towards the Red Lion, I was passed by Legover, determined to get the last space in the car park. To be fair, anything less than 95 and he would have been a bit too close to the next bend. Computer was not impressed by his stone throwing at her recently repaired windscreen.

Arriving at the pub a couple of minutes later, we still had 3 spaces to choose from.

Emerging from the car it was a cold windy morning, and we were all eager to get started. Into the village for the traditional Brinkley false trail, plus another couple of check backs, we eventually found the trail. Arriving at a checkpoint. I set off to my right, and came across dust, and a second blob, but no more. Turning to retrace our steps, we were pushed back by the following pack, who insisted we were on. "I only saw 2 blobs" I said, but Checkpoint insisted there were more. When another hasher said they had also seen two, the pack insisted there must be at least four blobs, so we all had to proceed to the road.

We managed to get back on the trail only to be sent on a long turnback.

Beerstop said this was the first confusing trail he had been on. Not sure which planet he been on.

All in all a good trail. Well done hares.

Down downs were awarded, not too sure what for. Frazer, Checkpoint, Ooh La La. And several others. (I should have made notes, but forgot I was doing the writeup)

Yes I also get the e-mail!

Thankyou hares
